

Alejandra Abella

Effective Communication and Aggression Avoidance in Animals Course

When humans say someone is "behaving like an animal," it is intended as an insult, but we humans are really far more aggressive than our non-human cousins. After all, we are super predators! Aggression has a very high cost in the animal world, so animals engage in many fascinating behaviors to avoid it. Could we learn from them about how to curb our aggression and get along better? Using images, video, the latest scientific research and open discussion, this course looks at several examples of effective communication and aggression avoidance in the animal kingdom and reviews our past and modern history as super predators.

Syllabus available upon request. Please contact us.