Animal Welfare Practicum Course

A practicum is a hands-on course, typically involving many/all aspects of a physical project. Many interesting life questions and issues are addressed, including ethical treatment of fellow beings; the use of math theorems to calculate design measurements; basic accounting and budgeting; and practical construction experience. Past practica have included: Research on the nutritional, habitat and welfare needs of a specific species; Design and planning (including constraints); Materials research and budgeting; and Construction of the habitat. Beyond the hands-on fun, this course offers lessons in responsibility, the welfare of others, and budget and life constraints. Please contact us to customize your course.
